

Loss Prevention

If you're looking for a highly rewarding, challenging, fast paced career, loss prevention may be right for you. Loss prevention is responsible for reducing losses from customers, associates, and companies as well as keeping track of assets. You may be called upon to apprehend shoplifters, vendors, and even associates who may be stealing or embezzling from the company. A loss prevention worker may have to testify in court to support observed behavior. Loss prevention specialists may also have to create and maintain a proper loss prevention policy for their employer. Northern's program is recognized by the National Retail Federation. The classes for this major are offered entirely on-line, and Northern is one of only a handful of schools that offer such a degree. Some students will use their Loss Preventions Management bachelor's degree to apply to the graduate program in Criminal Justice Management.

Northern's program is designed to 1) provide you with the knowledge, skills, attitudes, and abilities highly sought by retail firms, 2) serve your needs whether you are totally new to the field or you're looking for a degree completion program, 3) courses developed and taught by respected leaders in retail loss prevention, 4) offered completely on-line by an institution with industry-recognized technological suave, 5) enhance your job mobility, 6) allow you to leverage your prior coursework and professional experience into an accredited academic credential.

Skills and Competencies

Similar to most other fields, a Loss Prevention Management major should have strong interpersonal communication skills, along with outstanding organizational practices. Self-discipline and motivation are required for working independently on projects. Confidence and the ability to face conflict will also be needed in the occurrence of confrontation.
