

Political Science

If you're intrigued by the study of law, government, public policy, or public administration, a degree in political science may align with your interests.

If you are interested in state and local government, you would benefit from taking courses in state and local government, public policy, and public administration. Additional courses in state and local finance, budgeting, and intergovernmental relations are recommended to anyone planning to enter this field.

Opportunities for political science majors exist outside of the government fields as well. For example, there are growing international employment opportunities for persons trained in political science because so many social and economic issues require political intervention, in the form of public policies. If you major in political science, you should include some course work in comparative politics, international relations, political development, and interest group politics. The study of a foreign language is also important and could prove essential to career advancement.

Skills and Competencies

Like most liberal arts majors, the study of political science will give you the opportunity to master an array of various skills and competencies. Your writing and speaking skills are developed and honed through essays, papers, and oral presentations. Reading is also stressed in courses, and students are expected to be able to interpret, analyze, and evaluate texts. Critical thinking skills are developed, and students learn to formulate new ideas, problem solve, and reason logically.

Career Development

You should begin the resume-building process as soon as you can. The Academic and Career Advisement Center can assist you with career planning, while Career Services will help you fine tune your resume and look for jobs related to your field. In the meantime, the more hands-on experience you have, the better the chances are that you will find a job. Becoming involved in a professional related internship is a way to develop your professional skills and gain experience. Your academic course work is important as well, so be sure to maintain a high grade point average.

Additional Considerations

You can gain excellent experience in governmental fields by finding an internship related to your interests. Foreign language experience is required for some of these positions, and would be helpful for others.

A business minor may be helpful, and relevant experience would be beneficial. Some of the positions listed may require education beyond the bachelor's degree. Remember to take any necessary exams early, it can take six weeks for results to be sent to the schools to which you applied. Foreign language competency, sometimes in two languages, is required in many graduate programs.

Job Outlook

Starting salaries are contingent upon geographic location and the individual applicants work experience and initiative, and usually range from $40,000 to $80,000. Political Scientists should find a very competitive field with only a 5% increase in jobs.
