

Introducing...

An anthology of the contemporary American Indian experience in Michigan in fiction, poetry, prose, art and craft.

"Here, readers will find a rich set of stories, carved from experience, memory, and imagination, and woven seamlessly into old and ongoing storytelling traditions."

—Philip J. Deloria
Author of Playing Indian and Indians in Unexpected Places

Voice on the Water Great Lakes Native America Now

Featuring the works of more than 80 authors and artists, these are the stories, poems and images that echo the lives of contemporary American Indians living in Michigan.

The contributors' narratives and art address themes of the land, the lakes, family, the search for center, ideas of time and the past, communalism and our Native communities on and off reservation homelands, along with storytelling, Indian education, the Michigan urban Indian experience, ceremony and ritual, persistence of traditional arts and lifeways, and new cultural ways of being.

An insightful, enjoyable and important collection for all ages.
